What makes being a Travel Agent different from joining a Travel Club?

A Travel Agent is a recognized professional working under an accredited host agency (IATA, CLIA, ARC), earning commissions on bookings and building a willable business asset. You control your business, access industry training, and can pass down your income. A Travel Club is typically a paid membership that gives access to pre-negotiated discounts or group rates. You don't earn commissions, have no official credentials, and the benefits end if you stop paying. In short: Travel Agents earn money from the travel industry, while Travel Club members only save money on trips.
